Armand Southall

Dear Southall,

As a taxpayer concerned about the impacts of continued coal leasing on wildlife, habitat, and our climate, I am writing to support the reform of the coal royalty valuations on Federal and Tribal lands. The rule should not be repealed. It takes an important step to close loopholes and ensure American taxpayers receive a fair return on fossil fuel development on public lands. By rolling back important protections like this one, you put wildlife and our public lands at risk.

Climate change is threatening the very existence of wildlife populations, and coal mining threatens to directly destroy critical habitat. I urge you to maintain the new regulations that will help protect wildlife from the impacts of coal leasing, not subsidize coal leasing. Coal companies that are allowed to continue mining must be required to pay their fair share and should not be allowed to dodge royalty payments by exploiting outdated loopholes.

Continued encouragement of leasing new coal mines will harm declining wildlife species such as the mule deer in Montana, devastate crucial habitat and dramatically increase carbon pollution that is driving climate change and putting all wildlife at risk.

I urge you to keep the new rule, close these loopholes and ask coal companies to pay their fair share.

Thank you for utilizing the tools at your disposal to minimize the impacts of energy development on our public lands and to protect wildlife and our climate.

Sincerely,

Kimberly Badger

Dear Southall,

Protecting species from the impacts of climate change is a moral imperative to me because this is my world, my only world and this is the animal's world as well. I want them here with us. I want us all safe from the massive and global destruction that is caused by mining, producing and burning fossil fuels. Thank you. I am with Indivisible Monterey Bay.
