Armand: I'm assuming this is a public comment related to our proposed coal valuation regulations...so I'm forwarding to you to include with the others.

Please be advised,
Allowing the coal industry to profit from exploiting loopholes jeopardizes the peoples health, safety and environment. Not to mention contradicting the presidents agenda on climate change. Loopholes are known as misguided words within the language of a bill that is either written in error or written intentionally. Once a loophole is noticed it is up to those who have the authority to act in closing the loophole without delay. Allowing loopholes to continue would suggest an agenda of conspiring to favor one party, industry, company or individual over another in an attempt to exclude them from the bills original intent. Which would violate your oaths of office, policies and operating procedures.
